

or the injured employe—bear the expense of industrial accidents. And, according to the general Wisconsin rule, it is as careful of the interests of capital as the most scrupulous justice can ask. That is the LaFollette way.

—o—o—

WHAT DAD SAYS ABOUT IT

Dad says: That business of "inviting" old Rockefeller to appear before that congressional committee investigating the steel trust makes me tired. They ought to send a big policeman after the old hypocrite with instructions to grab him by the scuff of his sanctimonious neck and yank him before the committee.

But most of us are cowards. There are mighty few men who are not in awe of wealth. If Rockefeller wasn't a millionaire, nobody would be afraid of him.

But he's the millionest millionaire on earth, and men seem to be afraid to treat him like a two-legged man. Even the courts don't seem to be able to get around behind those millions and find Rockefeller, the man.

And the preacher man, Rev. Gates, forgot all about the camel and the needle's eye. Maybe he thought John D.'s power would extend into the hereafter, and that after Rockefeller had grabbed up the earth, he'd successfully turn his attention to Heaven and own that, too.

But nearly all of us have the habit. Men are afraid of masters. Money is power, because the men who are robbed of money let the fellows who get it have the power.

Kings, emperors and czars only, hold their vast power by working a gigantic bluff. They control armies only because the peasants and workers let them do it.

I'd like to see all the soldiers in the world organize themselves into an international union, go on a strike and refuse to shoot bullets at their brothers. There have been mighty few wars in which the men who carried the guns knew what they were fighting about, and why they were killing one another. They merely obeyed the order of the boss.

When the people of this land of the free and home of the brave actually become free and brave, the most powerful man in it will be the one who does the most for humanity and the least for himself.

But we're a long ways from it when we prate of equal rights for all and special privileges to none, and let one such human pest as John D. Rockefeller have more influence with law and government than a million honest men who earn their bread in the sweat of the face.

The greatest power in the world is the power of the people. When the people realize that, some of the kings and czars may be working with pick and shovel.

—o—o—

If you can't afford to go to South America to see a revolution, the next best thing is to give a woman tickets to a show at 7:50 p. m.